Uranium mostly due to human error has been put into the doldrums even though it's still very vital to world energy needs. It's just a matter of time before it will be needed again. For Argentina uranium has the potential to be a great winner. Blue Sky has a large area (150km by 50km) in Argentina where they are exploring and testing for large uranium deposits. The uranium they are discovering is mixed with vanadium, so they have two viable products. The targets they are looking at are immense.

Joseph feels a supply shortage is looming in uranium and that the price will rise in 2019. He thinks that uranium is worth betting on, it may be behind right now, but inevitably he believes it will win the race.
